Think about that. Just be nice to people.Just because you express your opinion about something to someone, and they don't like it, or even if you are flat out rude to them, doesn't give them an excuse or sane reason to commit mass murder. I'm nice by default to most people, but I'm not going to be nice to everyone out of fear of them going postal...and if they do go postal I'm not going to feel bad about it. Anyone who is teetering so close to the edge that being flamed on a gaming message board makes them kill people, well I'm pretty sure something else would have set them off...I get way more frustrated at idiots in DC traffic than even the worst people here True, most ppl are nice by nature. But it seems in today's society that is changing fast. Many people don't seem to give a rip about anybody but themselves. I have always been curious about what makes a perosn go over the edge. I've asked many mental health professionals if they could answer. They always say people will act extremely frustrated. With my dealings with the military, they always ask "are you thinking about hurting yourself or others." I think if someone has decided to finally strike back, they are no longer thinking logically and will not be honest with any medical people. Their wires have already been shorted.I myself am full of kinetic energy. Stagnent and harmless until provoked, like many people. I know not to just strike out and screw with people just because I can. 1 it's not right, and 2, you never know where they are mentally. But these people that are so quick to attack everyone just because they never received a swift kick in the a$$ as a kid scream fowl when someone holds them accountable. Many of the horrific murders always go back to an individual that was an outcast of some kind. I really don't believe that they chose to be an outcast. But because they are a little different, our society looks at that as weakness and people make themselves feel good and strong by picking on the weak. Beware the wounded animal. It fights with more fervor than a healthy animal, because it is fighting for its very life. [October 06, 2002, 02:33: Message edited by: AndrewCow]
