

---

Subject: Fahrenheit 9/11

Posted by SuperFlyingEngi on Sat, 10 Jul 2004 04:27:20 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Just saw it 5 minutes ago, quite a good documentary.

The first hour and a half or so are quite lively, and Micheal Moore points out some very interesting facts, like how the Saudis have used the Carlyle Group to give the Bush family 1.4 Billion dollars.

Then the movie's viewpoiont switches to the war in iraq.

Moore uses this segment of the movie to show what war is actually like, contrary to what you see on the news of buildings exploding and everyone being happy. In fact, the movie gets QUITE gruesome at times. This is not a movie I would recommend to anyone under 15, notwithstanding the fact that I am 14 myself.

Then the movie comes back to showing how Marine recruiters prey on low-income communities and Michael Moore trying to get congressmen to talk to their children about signing up for the military.

And finally, it ends with a hilarious Bush quote that I have never seen anywhere before.

Overall, quite a well put together movie regardless of political stance that I would recommending seeing, but not to children because the Iraq scene is quite gruesome.

---