Fact is, they hate news, they barely know anything, they ignorant of what's really going on in the World, most of them even think that Baghdad is the capital of Afghanistan.

Their opinion doesn't matter until they finally grow up in maturity. At the moment, politics don't matter to most of them, it's something boring made for "older people" and "nerds".

Yeah, the government owns a media network, doesn't mean that they control everything that is said.

I find it sad personally when we start talking about politics in history class, even the teacher sighs.

I could also say that 9 out of 10 of the Americans polled in the streets of New-York didn't know where Canada was, and also thought that Canada was an American state.

Get your facts right, politics is no entertainment for most teenagers almost everywhere. I had a talk with one of my friends in the electoral campaign, he thought that Liberals were evil because they wanted to apply a rule about "teenagers been home at 10:00P.M otherwise they'd get arested", which isn't true, it's only true in one county which was ours. Trust me, the media has nothing to do with what teenagers think.
