I am definately betting on something this week, I am the luckiest of lucky. (Ok, maybe not the luckiest, but it's still a sweet camera.)

Last week I drove to a nearby town. The town is surrounded by tall hills and mountains, and you can have a very pleasant hike down any of the numerous trails there. Anyhoo, I was climbing one trail and enjoying the good weather when I saw what looked like a silver box. When I approached, I saw it was a digital camera. Score!

It's a 3.3 mpixel powershot S20! Slightly scuffed, but otherwise fine. It rained the next day, so I was really lucky to get there when I did. When I got home, I also saw it had a 300 mb flash media card inside! This is like a 300 dollar value, (ish) I pity the fool who dropped it so carelessly. I hooked it up to my computer with the aid of a friend who has a similar model, and Canon, being the big company that it is, just happens to use the same USB cable for most of their cameras. Gotta love it. Anyway, just wanted to share. It also had some cool pictures of the large forest nearby one of the trails on it, and though I've never been in the area depicted, I have flown over the tower shown in one of the pictures. Those I'm putting those up in this thread, hence the warning to 56k users. Some of them are kind of blurry, but I felt like being thorough. (sp?) I don't have my own hosting, so I resized these and compressed them to avoid straining good ol' image shack.

Some awesome shots, though I don't think the skill level of the photos coincides with the price/abilities of the camera. Aircraftkiller, you being our photos guru, care to comment?

Thanks for wasting however many seconds of your life it took to read/look at all the pretty pictures.
