lol, suave, ACK.

Interesting info too....

The spooky thing about the Lynne fiasco is how deceptively intricate the internet persona was. In one hand, you have a person typically sharing one's life online and in the other hand, the same sharing is an elaborate web of mis-information developing a character that is dynamic and changes with the social forces from others.

Altogether intriguing, but unnerving too, to think about who would spend so much time on what would seem to be a psychology project?

EDIT: If you're having a hard time understanding, think about trust and faith. When those two are misplaced and backfires in your face, you remember. For some it's a matter of 'trick me once, shame on you, trick me twice, shame on me' while others, it's a whole other story.
