Well, the solution is obviously more spending on social programs but less spending on national defense. You see, the military is just full of baby-killing murderers, and there is no real threat of terrorism in the world today, so we don't need to spend so much on the services that keep us safe. My bleeding heart can't stand to see another "poor" human being wither away from lack of food stamps, though, so if we help the "poor," we'll help the nation. It's just that simple.
