EVERYONE here is, in one way or another, regurgitating information from another source (see 3 posts above this one).

I'm not necessarily asking you to read up on the points that OutFoxed makes. Just the fact that an entire documentary has been made and devoted to criticizing Fox's reporting should be some kind of indication that Fox News should be looked at sceptically. People don't just randomly make documentaries for no good reason. Yes Crimson, even Micheal Moore, while cutting and editing to skew information, brought the Bush administration under the microscope for a reason.

Since I'm not going to set up a whole research team to look at statistical data regarding Fox News--what this so called "bogus" doumentary did--I can only show someone so much.

When I sit down and watch Fox News, I am continually disgusted by phrases like "Only 160 days until you can re-elect Bush..." (referring to number of days left before election). Somehow, when I watch CNN or CBS news, that feeling of biased reporting is gone...hmm...
