
Subject: Vice Presidential Debate

Posted by Javaxcx on Thu, 07 Oct 2004 03:16:53 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Definately not as polar in the winner/loser of last week's debate. But I think Cheney probably came out on top by a narrow to modest margin.

Frankly, Edwards is nothing but a little kid in a big chair, and he just doesn't have the experience or guise at this point to be able to go against Cheney effectively.

Quote:My favorite part was when Dick said he couldn't answer in 30 seconds, to which he got the response: Well that's all you're going to get. ...Priceless

That's just irony. And if you or anyone else doesn't get it, ahem, well, you're probably a moron anyway.

Quote:I thought it was really wierd when Dick reponded to Edwards, thanking him for his kind words about his family, and then stopped.

You might call it a liberal trap on Edward's part. Cheney is fairly public about his views on gay marriage, and those views contrast that of the President. If Cheney said ANYTHING to agree solely with Edwards, it would leave the image that he is working against his partner. He caught onto it right away, and that is a pretty good debating skill on his part.

All in all though:

Besides, Cheney was angrily speaking through his teeth at one point fairly close to the beginning of the debate. That probably set the school boy back into his chair.
