

---

Subject: Bush: Pre-Senile Dementia?

Posted by Crimson on Tue, 12 Oct 2004 01:17:54 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Several options...

Maybe it IS a bulletproof vest and the Secret Service doesn't want people to know they thought he might need one at that debate.

Maybe it's some sort of medically-necessary brace for his spine or shoulders. (or maybe a bra j/k)

Maybe it's the tag for the jacket because he spilled a drink on his original jacket and they had to stop at Armani on the way to the debate to get a new one.

From what I've seen in the movies, they try to conceal wires. Between the shoulder blades isn't the place to do it. Wires would be better placed in the midsection where the jacket fans out slightly. Furthermore, you can't see any earpiece. And lastly, even IF someone were feeding him the words, it doesn't change the content of the message... the same as we Republicans weren't in an uproar on footage that plainly showed Kerry pulling some sort of what could possibly have been a cheat sheet from his pocket and unfolding it on the podium.

---