AIU, the various and sundry legit music download sites(iTuneds, ect) incorporate DRM in one form or another(proprietary formats, executeable code in the file that counts the number of machines it's been played on, ect) and thus aren't as good as what you can get either by buying the CD or illegitimately via Kazaa, Limewire, ect. that can be played anywhere.

The Record Labels still don't understand that their sales will increase when they stop producing albums with 1 decent song and then 14 tracks of crap.
