JavaxcxWhy does one prey to God in times of physical need (when God in fact will do nothing to affect the free will of anyone) and then not curse God when something bad happens. It seems to be a double standard on our part.

God doesn't have to grant you everything you ask for. When you pray to him, he answers you.

What's wrong with a lot of Christians is that they think because God doesn't answer their prayers the way they want them to, they think God hasn't answered their prayers. Which as I just said, He did answer them, just not in the way that the person wanted.

Why would I curse someone who has given me so much? He tests us every day, and every little problem and hardship is just another one of his tests to see how strong our faith is.
