Well, anyways, on my previous post I said I was going to the hospital Friday the 10th to get a couple of tests done. Well, anyways. I had my kidneys and bladder ultrasounded. And then for the other test they had me take all my clothes off and get into one of those things that you wear at the hospital. Then a male nurse came in and put some gell stuff on my penis so I wouldn't be able to feel the tube get shoved up the urethra into my bladder. It stung a little for about 10 seconds then it was all numbish. He put the tube up there and then some other person hooked the container of dye up to the tube and they watched the dye getting put in and told me to tell them when I felt like I had to go pee. They put like 2 and 1/4 pints into my bladder then I had to go pee. So they had me pee into this jug like thing and as I was peeing they watched in on the X-ray thing and made sure that the dye went where it was supposed to, not back up into my kidneys or anything like that. They said it all looked good, so I am hopign this means I will not have to get circumcised, but you never know, I still may have too. That's about it for today. I missed a full day of school for 2 tests that took 1 hour, though it took about 45 minutes to drive there, so that was about 2 and a half hours. My mom and I went to the super market afterwards and I had to get all the stuff on the top shelves since I'm taller than my mom, and all the stuff on the lower shelves because of her knees. Ok, that's finally all of what happened today.
