War just generates war, in a never ending cycle of hate. It's a circle, and with a circle, just can run around it until you end up at the beginning. War will never be stopped. We invest in it, and we need it. We started this never ending circle, and the only way to stop it is to have something big stand in the way. But there can never be something big. War must go on. Today's leaders aren't getting any nicer, or any less corrupt. They sink lower and lower into what they call "defence". This "defence" means becoming "offensive" towards other countries. It's the primal instinct of kill or be killed. Scientists say humans need to die off sometime soon, that some big epidimic will kill off a large number of humans. But humans are ending themselves. We can't continue to live the way we do. We're dying slowly. We are fighting amongst ouselves, like primitive creatures. We fight disease and things we should be fighting but to no avail, because goverment budgets are more set to fighting other human beings. People. But we turn a blind eye. We don't see this part. Most people just think "they hurt us, we hurt them back". It won't end. It's what we're taught. War is bad, there's no way to put it. But we aren't defending ourselves anymore. We're attacking others that we feel threaten us. Primitive instinct. It's what drives war. Nothing more.
