j_ball430ADMI use Microsoft Paint and Jasac PaintShopPro 7.

PSP is too restricting. It doesn't have near the same capacities as Photoshop does.

It's mostly down to personal preference.

For a start most professional graphic designers will tell you that Paint Shop Pro and Photoshop both have their good points. Also the capacities are only limited by the plug-ins. I have 20+ for PSP and 10+ for Photoshop.

For that image I posted earlier, I used Paint for accurate pixel editing, which does its job for a free application. Every image I do, I use many different tools for it. Paint Shop Pro and Photoshop work very well together, just for that image I decided it wasn't best/quickest to use Photoshop.
