Quote:Who gives a shit about the terrorists' well-being? When U.S. soldiers' lives are on the line, every measure possible should be taken to ensure their survival. If that means scaring a few captured terrorists with some german shepards to get them to divulge whatever helpful information they may have, so be it.

Quite interesting, considering I believe America is up in arms about people being taken hostage by the Iraqi "terrorists". I guess this falls under the "It's ok, as long as it doesn't happen to me" category.

If you're not willing to admit that this is the exact same reasoning that the other side uses, and accept that it is ok, your arguement holds no strength.

Quote:Not really since all that really matters is the truth; whether or not they were found before or after the war is irrelevant. The truth is he had them, and the programs for their development were just waiting to be restarted as soon as enough people in the U.N. were paid off through the Oil-for-Food program and sanctions were lifted.

And the truth is that the ends do not justify the means. The war was entered into illegally, no way around that. Whether or not something incriminating was found as a result does not matter. After all, if the police force their way into a home and perform an illegal search, what usually happens?

Quote:No, TERRORISTS are what we're fighting right now in Iraq. Not "insurgents" or "Iraqi militants" or "resistance fighters" or any other prettied-up term the anti-war media might play up. These are TERRORISTS. Keeping people up all night is NOT torture IN ANY NORMAL SENSE OF THE WORD!!!!

Gasp! A country's people are defending themselves from an invading force by any means available to them! Terrorists!
