SuperFlyingFungil don't know why people live in a place like this; it seems like every five years or so huge tsunamis come in and wipe out a ton of people.

I lived in Colombia for 6 years, from 1993 to 2000. Earthquakes were a common occurrence there, but they were minor, between 2.5 and 4.5 on the Richter scale. However, in 1999, a 7.0 earthquake hit the central part of Colombia, leveling 32 cities and leaving thousands dead and millions homeless.

If there are such powerful earthquakes, why don't they just get up and leave? News flash, asscake, they can't. They have spent their entire lives there, and all of their belongings and memories belong there. Besides, where would they go? If Mount Saint Helens is a volcano that was still active, why do people live near it? The same question applies to Mount Kauai'lea in Hawaii.

Next time, use that quivering mass of jelly you call a brain.
