The pledge does not violate the establishment clause of the Constitution. It is not unconstitutional. People just make that stuff up because they're too insecure in their own atheistic beliefs to be "offended" by two little words in the Pledge of Allegiance. If they were more firm in their beliefs, they wouldn't care that the pledge says "under God" or that the national motto on our currency is "In God we trust."

They were biblical principles upon which this great nation was founded, so what's so wrong about recognizing them? Why do you people continue pissing on the principles that give you the right to piss on them in the first place?
