j_ball430Today's music is all fucking cookie-cutter. They have no creativity. Everything sounds like another.

My dad was a 50s guy. that is, he was born in the 50s.

the first song he ever heard that was of a rap nature, (by rap I mean fast talkin, fast steady beat stuff) was one his friend handed him before he left work one evening and went home listening to it on his headphones on a bike. the song happened to be The Message. no, not dr Dre's The Message, it was by grandmaster flash & the furious five.

anyway, that little post put me in mind of it. it's really original for it's time.. just listen to some of the lyrics and how they tie in with the rest of the song. plus the chorus, which has been copied by eminem in one of his old songs. it's one of my favourites, or old-bies as you might say. First heard it up at my dads, and I was like man, this song really kicks the crap outta modern rap and r&b. they're all the same shit, but this one has a style of its own.

now I think of bands like blazin squad, and they're a joke compared (well they're a joke anyway, but who cares).
