just a tid-bit of information here,

its= possesive form of the pronoun "it".
it's= contraction of the words "it is".

Two completely different words. It has nothing to do with grammar, and everything to do with using the correct word where it is supposed to be used.

You wouldn't say go left, have someone drive over a cliff, then make an inferrence that it doesn't matter that you mean right. Two different words used for two different meanings.
