It's no big secret that I don't like Tony Blair, but ignoring all the claptrap about handwriting tests at the bottom of the article [because they aren't relevant to my point], it was an incredibly bright idea.

Someone, whether TB or BG or some #10 lacky left a big pad of doodles supposedly by Blair.

The Tabloids had a feeding frenzy.

Some said he had a death wish, some said he wasn't capable of doing his job, and if I remember reading it correctly, one said he was thinking of quitting the party altogether... I think that was in the Telegraph, though don't quote me.

And then, when I picked up some of the morning papers in the library yesterday, the amount of backtracking the Tabloids did rivalled Tony Blair changing his stance over WMDs

Just goes to show the lesson of the times.

Wait until you get the right intelligence before you jump to conclusions.

[Intelligence? Tabloids? Surely Shome Mishtake]
