Have you ever heard of internet lingo?

A. The internet isn't an english class.

B. It doesn't matter who's correct. I know ACK is correct in saying that it isn't right to use the word "skin" how people use it, but thats totally irrelevant.

See the quote?

IRON-FART

Nobody agrees with you, and nobody will change no matter how much you whine about it.

Before people start calling me a hypocrite...

Nobody agrees with him in the sense that "skin" is an unacceptable word...

A. The internet still uses English to communicate. Your job isn't an english class either, yet I dare you to use stuff like this in a business correspondance. (I wait for the day I see "U r" in a business letter)

B. Just because something is acceptable by one person (or group) doesn't make it the correct thing to use. Heck, if this were true, you could call American's "Dogs" and claim it to be 'lingo' simply because a group uses it to describe them.

"skin", wheither is it acceptable or not, is hypocritical if you turn around and call "I337 5p3111|\|6" unacceptable, as it is "internet lingo", when "skin" is also of this form.

I'm not saying you, IRON, ARE a hypocrite. Unless, you are guilty of this.
