They're not Christian holidays. They have been conformed into "christian" holidays by predominant religious influences such as the entire Catholic denomination.

Christmas has absolutely no Christian significance other than the reminder that Christ was born on some day of the year that we don't know. So we ended up slapping a day on the pagan holiday regarding a birth of one of the pagan gods, and slapped Easter on the spring Equinox and called it the ressurection of Christ.

What is coincidental, is that two earthquakes occured over a mostly pagan/non-Christian region exactly one day after a major PAGAN holiday.
