For profits, as I've been stating the whole time. The only reason why they make it that way is so that they get money out of it. I'm not saying making a profit is bad, but to do it just for that is quite ridiculous. Everybody just sounds like everybody else. If they had their own sound, then it'd be different. Take, for instance, this "music" that consists of people yelling and screaming their lyrics. I could go out and make album after album of yelling and screaming, but it'd be just for the point of making money. I mean, who the hell truly enjoys yelling and screaming to the point that you can't even consider it music anymore?

I'd rather listen to people who are playing what they love than people who are pretending as to make a few bucks. Take AC/DC as an example, they don't give a fuck what anybody thinks, and that's what makes them awesome, that and they have their own sound and aren't a bunch of no talent hacks. They paved the way for a lot of bands.
