every time one of these predictions come out, they sound believable enough yet they always seem to be happening in just a couple of years time. Of course by that time everyone will have forgotten the prediction so the predictist gets away with it. Not saying it isn't true or there's no basis for the predicament but people make dramatic predictions quite often and publicize them.

Loosely related. who has heard of the bible prophecy that says during the age of the rebirth of Israel (now) a series of events will occur as well as the rebirth of jesus christ, and basically the end of a lot of the world as we know it? I read this on both a website, which looked BS, but the same thing was more or less said in a documentary about it not long ago, which predicted this in 2007 while the website only said "in the near future". They all say that the bible's prophecies have all been fulfilled thus far, saying what the prophecies were and pointing out that they happened, but they didn't prove that the bible actually prophecised these things, no documentation, or that they were precise prophecies that could not have been fulfilled any other way; although they did include some quotes from the bible. here is something I found about these end of the world prophecies, and it does have relation to this topic even though it's a religious site:
