Subject: Re: FireOx | Opera
Posted by Aircraftkiller on Sat, 18 Jun 2005 22:32:33 GMT

Quote:Advertisments suck. It doesn't matter if you don't have to pay to keep them on. While there's a free version of Opera, why use that when you can get Firefox, which has more extensions than anyone will ever need?

Advertisements are what keeps the Internet running free for the most part. Without advertisements, everything would be a paid service and you'd be unable to see much of anything unless you shelled out $5+ per website just to view its content, in addition to your ISP rates.

Extensions do not a browser make. Opera already has what Firefuck needed to begin with. It loads websites faster, and doesn't have memory problems like Firefuck does... The whole "minimize it and it unloads all memory, just to take a while to reload again" problem.

Quote:Who cares how much memory it takes, as long as its faster.

Uhh... Generally when something requires more memory, it's not going to allow your computer to operate as fast as it should.