I've seen one link (can't seem to find it right now...) that showed photos with airliner sized landing gear (with a guy sitting on it) in front of the building among a pile of large pieces of torn up aluminium.

They act like a pressurised tube made out of pretty thin aluminium going about 400+ MPH into the side of a large reinforced concrete building will leave the plane intact enough to make it completely obvious. When the front of the nose slows down and stops just inside the building, the rest of the plane is still going at 400 MPH into the building.
