Just because you do not need something does not mean that you ought to be blocked from buying it by the government.

I would not mind a hybrid version of my Jeep- if it weren't for the fact that it is harder to obtain parts for them and they are thus harder to maintain. However, that will become less and less of a problem over time. Maybe by the time the Jeep needs replacing there will be a small hybrid SUV of similar design out that suits my needs.

It is good that auto manufacturers are coming up with new and more varied hybrid designs. That's a big step towards mass market appeal.
