Ouch. Maybe next time I complain about spelling I should double check my post. You have a good point there. Yet his grammar and spelling I felt impacted the correct reading of his post. It is like me writing:

i have to meet people in the feeled of polytics to know more stuff for the arghument i make later according to plan it should be a good discussing the topic will be interesting and like I plan there is no room for lose

Although the above was an admittably heavy handed example it does affect the content (which is not content that is real, if you descipher something from that then don't assume it is my actual plans).

And I can only see one spot for a comma. Please tell me where I can place them.

Oh, and "DuH!" isn't a sentence. A sentence needs a subject and predicate (hmm... I am not about to look that up but I think I misspelled that), and you placed capital letters in the middle of the word.
