Even then, gasoline doesn't cost that much. It's still about the price of a gallon of milk, and if you decided to buy 20 gallons of milk every two weeks I bet you'd be bitching about the price of that too. Conserve fuel and get your fat ass on a bicycle; or start walking.

Or buy a smaller, lesser consuming vehicle/hybrid.

Sure, the base price of such vehicles isn't fully affordable (to be honest I have no idea how much they cost), but this money will most likely return in your pocket over a year (and this still depends on your way of life).

On the other hand if you have a rather big family (let's say 3 kids), it's alright to buy a vehicle like a Dodge Caravan or Ford Freestar, because your choice is fully justified.

If you have a motor home, I hope for you it's a diesel.

If you own a boat, buying a pickup truck is fine, but don't use it to go to work, jeesh... And you don't need a six wheeler to carry it around, either.

If your job requieres you to have a pickup truck, then alright.

But don't buy a SUV to cruise the city, that's just retarded
(nobody uses them for anything else 80% of the time).

SIR THE ACCESS ROAD TO MY HOME IS MADE OF DIRT, I NEED A SUV!

SHIT I HAVE TWO DOGS, I NEED A SUV. (obviously you're going to take them everywhere you go. )
