I will do that for them. All I saw the 'e-terrorist' thing as was a message to me and the other moderators here that we were allowing unwanted bullshit to be posted here. That opinion is fine, and warranted given the situation.

The part I didn't appreciate was the 'vigilante justice' going on. I don't know why formerly positive contributors all of a sudden felt justified in padding their post count (which is serious business, you know) with garbage...

Basically, I'm glad this little fad has run its course. If you have a problem in the future and you want to collaborate on a solution, try to think of something more productive and approach me publically or privately about it. I would have thought you guys would know that I respond to it... just ask Hydra, Nightma12, and RenX who were JUST promoted to solve a problem that was brought up by Joseph Collins.

I really would like this to be the last word on this matter, so I'm closing the thread.
