Actually for a VW Beetle it is kinda original... Do you know how many of those things were made? I have never seen in real life a beetle with a flames job and my family is in a VW club!

Its simply a way to customize the beetle to be a little more original since they were some of the most heavily produced vehicles ever.

You can easily find a vehicle with flames on the hood but when do you see a beetle shaking right next to you at a red light. The sterio in the back shakes the whole car and then to top it off now it has a flame job. That to me makes my brothers VW original.

In reply about the spray paint. I'm not sure what kind he used. I laughed at him when he first said what he was going to do because I figured it would fade or peal

For my first car I'm probably going to be 4x4in a VW beetle. 3 inch suspension lift($300) and a 2 inch body lift($200).
