It may be irrelevant with regards to what you've been saying, but I brought it up in response to warranto's claim that drugs were unnecessary since one could have the same experiences without them. And, although I do not agree that just reading about what it does to the brain is enough to know what it feels like, that argument really isn't going anywhere so I'm going to drop it.

And you're right. There is no reason to do mushrooms. Everyone who has ever used them is either totally insane, or is so stupid they have to wear a helmet. So while I may burn in hell or something for doing drugs like that, to me it's not really that big a deal, and I'm going to keep doing them, just as soon as I find my helmet. I imagine it is almost as rewarding to know you're better than everyone who's out there drinking or tripping or whatever, as it is to being doing it first-hand.
