

---

Subject: Re: Global Warming: Katrina, Rita, Wilma: Whats next?

Posted by Renegade on Tue, 25 Oct 2005 13:51:17 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

God of Death wrote on Mon, 24 October 2005 22:44 Personally I think people are overreacting a little bit to Global Warming. I think that it may be happening, but at a much slower rate than what some people are saying. It is a known fact that the climate slowly changes from year to year. One winter it can be extremely cold, like it was here in Kansas about three years ago. To being quite mild, like it was last year. One year we can get a lot of storms, while the next year get very little. Climates change. I think of the South Park episode on global warming when I hear people like Barbara Striesand(sp?) talking about it.

So your saying, i could just be a natural trend that the earth itself follows?

Hm, interesting theory. It reminds me of the winter of 98 here in ontario. Worst one in 30 years, but since, its been crap.

Crap being, i like the snow, lol i can make snow forts

---