

---

Subject: Re: Church of FSM

Posted by Javaxcx on Tue, 25 Oct 2005 17:47:37 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Goztow wrote on Tue, 25 October 2005 08:34 Too many people base definitions here on "what I see is what's right". That's all but true, for exemple: a "color blind" person will see red as brown. So who's right? And don't tell me that what the majority sees is the definition of what's right then...

That's why you don't rely on sensorial experience to define objective truths.

Rationality is the key to determining that which you see as blue, and I as green. Reason might impose "red" to that colour, thus nullifying both intuitions. The point is, the notion of reason not a sensorial thing, and thus we can call it absolutely objective if used correctly. Of course different conditions result in different applications of reason, and some of the CONCLUSIONS are false, but what is important is that reason itself is never false as its very existence is a priori.

---