If you get the professional edition of ad-aware, their pop-up blocker works quite well. Also, an easier way than to deal with pop-ups, disable java and javascript. That'll nearly neutralize all pop-ups.

Aircraftkiller wrote on Mon, 14 November 2005 12:16 Why would I want Firefox to block pop-up advertisements when Opera does it already? At Sarah's house, right now, I have to use Firefox and it's horrible compared to what Opera is capable of. It's even worse than the last time I used it. I don't see any pop-up blocker, there's little functionality implemented with the new "tabs" and the browser itself runs slow and inefficiently compared to Opera.

The thread's purpose is for pop-up blockers, not our opinions on Firefox and Opera.
