It's not as much a matter that Canadians want a Conservative government, as they literally "have no confidence" in the liberal one. Frankly, I haven't had confidence in this minority in years. I agree with some of the policies they establish, and I would very much like it to stop there, but some greedy twits took advantage of the system, and if the conservatives get in-- and they absolutely WILL-- then I have to face some serious changes in legislation. My line of work depends greatly on the government, and with a conservative insignia next to the Canadian flag, I have to worry about possible pay cuts as well as take extra effort to ensure my own safety as privatization of our medical system will leave me penniless in such an event.

The liberals started out fine, then they took it too far-- and we suffer for it.
