That is a sticky subject, and very tough to say. Although, I would never tell that person to stop. On a marathon game at walls, I was n00b'd for point whoring the Nod PP with a tank. I wasn't going to destroy the PP from outside their base by shelling. However, neither team had a ref and the credits I made funded (ion) the last rush to take their PP. Plus those bitches didn't have a tank and I did, so go jump a stump.

Very tough to say, but as you pointed out, they can be an asset and the difference between a win and a loss.

This falls along the lines of, when do you stop repairing a structure that the other team is shelling. I.E. the Hand on Field
