Not only that, but let's face it- the Ren community isn't getting any bigger. At best, whatever handful of newbies come in from time to time offset the loss of veteran players.

You don't mess up peoples' servers because you just fucked up- you do it because you wanted to be an asshole to someone, or multiple someones as it were. What, an "oops, I'm sorry, it won't happen again" is supposed to be enough? Do you actually believe that these people really feel sorry for doing these things on the internet, where their real identity may never be known, and there is little risk that anyone would actually come after them- even if it was public knowledge?

"Oops, sorry" is for the times you do something like shutting down a server when you're losing the round, or pissing off your team for the whole game by blocking the harvy, or other dumb shit like that. Crashing servers, cheating, and so forth...that's all three strikes as far as I'm concerned. Folks who do that shit are a cancer on the whole community. They are no loss if they disappear forever- I'd go so far as to say that we're all better off with them gone, no matter how sorry they claim to feel. If they did it once, they might be driven to do it again for similar reasons- and they've proven that they have the ability.

Here's a poser for you: how many players does the community lose every time one of these numbskulls decides that the rules shouldn't apply to them? How many honest players and server operators are driven off to other games by the mass of script-kiddies and 1337 haxX0r-wannabes that fuck everyone over just for kicks?

No sympathy here. None at all.
