But, from a logical point of view, assuming that there is something you have no proof of whatsoever makes no sense at all.

Oh! Oh! The "You have no proof, therefore it does not exist" arguement. I LOVE completely obliterating this arguement!

At one point in time, no had any proof of the following:

- 1 Billion dollars
- Anything at the molecular level
- The shape of North America (or any landmass)
- The "fact" that the earth orbits the sun
- electricity
- motor vehicles
- the wheel

etc.

A bit of trivia. At one point around the end of the 19th century (or 1900's, I forget), the Scientific authority in Britian actually declared (or was about to declare) science to be obsolete as everything there was to discover, had been discovered.
