If you spend all your time worrying about all the different ways the world could end, it will end before you have a chance to do anything worthwhile with your miserable existence. A human lifespan isn't even a blip on history; what's a measly century against a universe some 10-12 billion years old? End of the world! Ooo, scary.

I see where you are coming from, it is a GREAT way to interpret it, but when the worlds major leader, leaders who can launch nukes, join a group and can essentially play out the end of the world, for example, every president in one room, Bush tells North Korean leader to do something to anger the American people he does it we have a reason to go to war. I don't know know why they want this, perhaps they want to reduce the world population to about 500 million people and have total control over it. I say the world takes care of the evil people, yes evil, and establishes a truly good society, one where there will be no suffering, and we do live in a time and place where homes can be ENTIRELY self sufficient, they can grow their own, food, produce their own electricity and etc.... THEN the world can truly rest. I don't think that in this day and age, goverments are needed. Yes we would have to build places to advance tecknology, and have a world wide military, but after all, the people would be free, they wouden't have to rely on the government.
