
Subject: Re: what would

Posted by DreamWraith on Wed, 05 Jul 2006 20:55:33 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Just because certain persons do not choose to use cheats in single player, does not mean that anyone who uses cheats in single player are "cheating themselves" or doing some great wrong. To say that is just stupid.

Just because a person doesn't care about saying "i beat the game on legendary w/o cheating folk", or being able to claim "dewd ive never cheated in sp" doesn't mean they are cheating themselves.

It is all a matter of choice. Maybe your life, and your self worth, depends on not cheating in a single player game. Maybe that is what is all important to you.

I think for most people, there are far more important things. Sometimes people don't CARE about "being skilled". I know i sure in the hell could care less.

When I have played renegade online on the rare occasion, i have gotten utterly slaughtered. Do I care? No, because gasp I do not live my life to be good at games. Games are merely a form of entertainment to pass the time.

For you to say someone cheating in single player is cheating themselves, is only taking your personal feelings and applying them to every human being.

Some people could care less about "epenis" and would rather have fun in games (such as the GTA example mentioned earlier).

Games are intended to be fun. If a person lacks gaming skill, and thus chooses to "cheat" in single player in order to actually be able to experience the game, who are you to discount that?

If a person could care less about completing the game, and just wants to run around doing funny shit, in gasp a game, meant for entertainment, who are you to say they should do otherwise?

A person cheating in single player is no different than a person who only watches the last couple episodes of a series like american idol.

Not everyone cares about the "big picture" or "pure experience". And they don't and shouldn't have to, they are just GAMES.
