

---

Subject: Re: hope none of you are them

Posted by warranto on Sat, 15 Jul 2006 17:40:43 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Crimson wrote on Sat, 15 July 2006 06:07warranto wrote on Fri, 14 July 2006 05:59Crimson wrote on Thu, 13 July 2006 23:26Well, I bought a "Yo God!" meter. If God exists, all he has to do is move the little needle over to "Yes". While it stays on "No", I will continue to believe he doesn't exist. It arrives soon.

I'm sorry Crimson, but do you realize how -well, to call it what it is- pathetic it is to base your belief on the absence of something doing what you demand it to do?

I guess you fail to grasp my point. I don't believe in any god created by any religion. I see your belief in a god as you view a child believing in Santa Claus. To me, the story of a man up at the North Pole making toys with elves is just as illogical and implausible as the story of our Jesus. Personally I don't see how it was such a huge sacrifice if the story is as you say. If he knew he would come down and die for our sins and become a god or whatever, then how is that a sacrifice? If I could die right now and become an immortal god, I'd sign up too. The sacrifice of death loses all meaning when you don't actually lose your life.

That's my point. It's a joke. All of it. A very elaborate joke that has fooled billions.

Oh, it doesn't matter to me if you believe or not, just don't base it on an argument of "Do what I demand, or I won't believe".

As for the whole "Santa Clause" thing, try to look back on where the idea of him came from. There is a reason he is also call "St. Nick". While the whole North-pole, riding around the world in one night is ficticious, "Santa Clause" was still very much a real person.

---