

---

Subject: Re: Truth about 9/11...

Posted by PlastoJoe on Fri, 28 Jul 2006 06:12:42 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Feetseek wrote on Thu, 27 July 2006 23:21 If you don't know all the facts or you aren't 100% sure if one side of the story is true, then don't just close your mind to the other story.

This would be an excellent thing to tell the makers of the documentaries. What is aggravating is that they and their sheep are amazingly condescending and use the "obvious" fallacy when it's clear that if it was so obvious, more people would see it.

If they didn't want to maintain the WTC buildings, why not simply implode them without people inside? It would be cheaper without damage to the emergency crews and other buildings and all the money they ended up paying the victims and their families. A Republican government especially is against government spending, so it's highly improbable that a Republican administration that could so carefully plan and cover up (without leaks of any kind in either stage of the process) a very expensive operation against its own interests (military, free commerce) without an equally careful analysis of how it would negatively impact the nation afterwards.

Anyway, Maddox had it right. Of course a random schmuck is going to uncover an elaborate conspiracy no one has leaked even after 5 years and publicize it to the world without any retaliation against him.

---