
Subject: Re: hope none of you are them
Posted by Scythar on Fri, 28 Jul 2006 20:08:51 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Yeah so it's like this:

Matter of faith #1 - This is the God that has always been. He created everything.

Matter of faith #2 - This is a religion that describes the God's ways, e.g. Christianity. This is spawned from #1, but is just a guess at best.

What Crimson is saying is "I don't believe #1(God) because #2(Guess) is BS"

So, yeah, the religion might be BS but the God still exists. However, if you deny the religion, you are left with a God that you know absolutely nothing about, except that he/it started everything (even this isn't provable, but it's often the basis of an omnipotent God). It's not very easy to believe in that, but it's beside the point. Warranto's argument isn't there to support any religion or beliefs. In fact, the only effect it seems to have is deny any religion in the first place, but not deny God. As I've stated in other threads, I too believe in a higher force, but not the one described in any curent religions. I make my own observations of this force, but I'm quite open-minded about the whole thing.
