Subject: Re: hardkil has threatened to impersonate me
Posted by {IRA}IronHorse on Thu, 03 Aug 2006 08:03:58 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

havoc9826 wrote on Thu, 03 August 2006 02:32Oh look, you joined our IRC network again while I was at work yesterday.

FYI, since you didn't listen on IRC, your IP address is broadcast to game servers when you play, and sometimes, your subnet is displayed in IRC. IP addresses are also embedded in e-mail headers, so every e-mail you send has your IP address in it (unless you know how to spoof an IP). Also, I did not give away your entire IP address to anyone who does not already have access to it (Black-Cell staff only). I never asked anyone to use your IP to hack a game server supposedly running on that IP, nor do I condone such action, especially since it's against the law. However, you have PUBLICLY threatened to "blow [our] damn server to hell", and that brings up some interesting issues. Should anyone feel like it, they can report you to Comcast for violating your Terms Of Service (I'm sure there's someting in their Contract/Service Agreement/whatever forbidding threats to hack people). Also, if you really DO work for Vivendi Universal in their Los Angeles office, I could show up in person (with your building's security officers, since you've previously threatened to kick my ass) during my lunch someday in the future and tell them one of their employees with with a work-IP hostmask of "BA746E52.C6A409CC.3CC1367E.IP" has taken time out of work (the newest log's timestamps are PDT, so it was 2:05 PM when you rejoined) to assume multiple false identites and threaten a false lawsuit against a video game server. I'm sure they'd be thrilled to hear about it. I could also file a police report with the LAPD regarding your intent to assault me ([02:19:19] <BC_Guest> I'll kick you fucking ass bitch; subsequent comments). However, I'm not a malicious person, and I do not wish for you to lose your job or go to jail over something that can be corrected with a public apology from YOU to the administrators of Black-Cell.

If you really did serve in the Marine Corps, I apologize for assuming that you were an angsty teenager going through puberty, but you should know from your time with the Corps that you need to have respect for authority, even if you disagree with what they tell you to do. Threatening to harm someone financially by forcing them to pay repair costs on a crashed server is extremely immature, and is unbecoming of someone who wishes to be respected for serving our country. Risking your life to protect the freedoms and laws that all US citizens have does not give you the right to abuse any of them. What makes you more entitled than any other serviceman? Are you better than any others who returned from combat and those who didn't? I doubt you'd say yes, but if you would, you have problems. Most servicemen are law-abiding citizens, and I would hope you would like to count yourself among them. I salute you for risking your life to protect our way of life, freedoms, and everything else, but you need to be an honorable person to receive respect beyond that.

Let me make one thing clear here. First of all you're more then welcome to stop by Vivendi any time. Do you think for one second I am stupid enough to contact you with a personal company IP address linked to me? LOL.... the computer I used is an open system so, there is no way to trace its use to any one person. Second issue here is showing up with building security over an internet argument? lmfao.... they would throw you out on your a. You started this whole deal over something stupid. I ask you to test someone for possible data hax use and you had to act like a jacka. I run game servers and have for a long time and I think I know if someone is using or not.

For crying out loud I make games I know when things are just to obvious. I'm guessing this person was your friend so, you decided to act like a jacka. I really don't care and thats that. Oh and as far as the whole Comcast thing goes, I doubt they would really care but, I'm sure they would like to know your trying to get newbs to hack my system. Good luck on that though your never get through. You want to talk about me saying I'd blow your system yet, you're trying to get people to hack my server you are the most ironic person I have ever known.