And now the Bush administration is talking about how stong they are on protecting airplanes from terrorism. So instead of installing cheap, highly effective liquid/gel explosives detectors that were already funded, the Bush administration though a better course of action was to revise transport rules so that no one can bring any sort of liquid onto a plane.

Actually, instead of installing explosives detectors (which by the way, we already have, but I'm guessing you don't get out much), we're blowing those fuckers up in Afganistan, Lebanon and Iraq.

PROBLEM SOLVED
