Fair enough. In hand-to-hand combat (Which Pirates are greatly romanticed for), Vikings would win. In ranged combat, I declare a tie since:

- Viking bows reload faster than pistols
- Pirate pistols (And pistols in general) tend to be innacurate.

That's working under the assumption that Vikings didn't use Cannons on their ships, which is wrong. Vikings are most famous during the pre-cannon middle-ages, but they've thrived even after the invention of the cannon.

j_ball430 wrote on Thu, 17 August 2006 12:36This doesn't count, then. If there's no army of pirates, then how would you know if an army of vikings would win?

Just because Pirates are too disorganized to form an army doesn't mean they're exempt from this test.

In any case, if you gathered an equal number of pirates and Vikings and had them go at it, the Vikings would win, because Pirates can't work together at all. To use a Renegade metaphor, Vikings are Team Players, where as Pirates are the n00bs who try the 1-man rushes.

The score stands at 2.5/3 In favor for the Vikings.
