positive, too. True, not every map is going to be a gem, but this way people can form his or her own opinions. And that's positive as well.

I remember Mod Map Night. I think it was and still is a good idea.

You can fuck off with your hounding of me in topics.

1. Everything positive doesn't make a good outcome.
 2. The people who make the crummy maps aren't going to get better because almost every single one just gives up anyway. Only a few actually stick around to get better... And they didn't need any "Fan Map Night" to get where they are.
