First off, there is NOTHING wrong the the Express editions of Visual Studio 2005. It is the same exact thing as VS2005! The only difference is you do not have the templates to create things such as setup projects and what not. Which, you can code yourself! You have access to all the .NET and Windows libraries. So don't go around saying "omg don't use the Express versions they suck" unless you really do have a valid, true reason as to why it may be true.

Second off, I have tried quite a few IDE's and NOTHING and I mean NOTHING compares to Visual Studio 2005.

Help-Linux, you will be best off to learn GUI, (Windows Forms programming) in the Windows Forms forums at: <http://www.windowsforms.net> and click the forums link.

Add me to your msn as well, I can help you with things related to both Console and Windows Forms GUI Programming. Email: dcom\_productions@msn.com

You should also consider looking into the C# programming language for things that do not require the complexity of the C++ programming language. However I can help you in C++ as well.

I was actually going to ask you if you wanted to join DCOM Productions as a Lead Programmer awhile back in the desktop thread when I saw that you were using Visual Studio 2005. If you would be interested, contact me on msn or whatever.
