It's all relative to personal opinion because what one person sees as educated or "making a correct choice" may not be the same to the other.

While I do agree that many people are ignorant bastards, that is still just my opinion -and thinking otherwise would make me ignorant. (think deep, lol)

Anyway, since I'm pretty 'Darwinistic' I would say let the idiots vote and deal with who they vote into office. If they're dumb and vote in someone stupid ... then a dumb nation is represented by dumb individuals because of dumb decisions.

Though that may be annoying and usually frightening, it is still democracy at its truest form, and I think it should be respected as more of a God-given right than a privledge.

If working with absolutes, the fools should still vote so that a fair and democratic result is still earned---rather than the poll resulting in a psuedo-democratic election.

Maybe rather than telling people not to vote because they're dumb we should spend that energy educating them so they are more likely to make a more accurate assessment of the decision to be made.
